GRAND WEDDING AT SEATTLE.

[SPECIAL DISPATCHES TO THE OREGONIAN.]

[The wires between Portland and San Francisco worked badly last night, hence THE OREGONIAN is without its usual quota of dispatches.]

PARIS, Jan. 26.—The ministers to-day had another conference with the committee of the chamber of deputies on the bill against the pretenders, and in reply to various questions they promised to concur in any decision the committee might come to. After the departure of the ministers the committee adopted a proposition including Algiers and the colonies, that all members of families having reigned in France shall be deprived of their political rights as citizens, and declaring them ineligible to any office, and preventing them from belonging to the army. The resolution of the committee further provides that transgressors of the proposed law shall be amenable to the correctional tribunal, and liable to from one to five years' imprisonment, after which they shall be again expelled. The discussion revealed wide divergencies between the views of the ministers and the committee.

[illegible] inquired whether the ministry would use the repressive powers granted. The only answer obtained was that they would examine the subject. [illegible], minister of the interior, said no one [illegible] of threatening trouble. Some demonstrations, but they had no chance of realization. [illegible], he thought, considering the general [illegible] of the nation, could become formidable. [illegible] which had gained currency, that the [illegible] against Prince Jerome had been dismissed, is contradicted, and it is formally announced [illegible] that Count De Chambord has no idea of [illegible] a manifesto under the present circumstances.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Senate.

WASHINGTON, Jan. [illegible].—The senate in considering the tariff bill this morning took up the paragraph [illegible] pig iron, spiegeleisen, wrought and cast scrap iron, and scrap steel of every description.

Sherman moved to strike out $6 per ton and make the duty 3-10 of a cent per pound, equal to $[illegible] per ton, the rate recommended by the tariff commission. In the opinion of those best informed the reduction proposed by the finance committee, if enacted, would stop half the furnaces in this industry. Sherman's amendment was rejected—ayes, 16, nays, 37.

On motion of Platt, boiler punchings or clippings of iron or steel beams or bars be added to the list of articles to be admitted at $6 per ton, and that the proviso at the end of the paragraph be amended so as to read "that nothing now therein specified shall be deemed scrap iron or scrap steel except waste or refuse iron or steel that has been in actual use and fit only to be remanufactured by remelting or rerolling," but by general consent this proviso was reserved for further consideration by the committee on finance.

The next paragraph was read embracing steel ingots, cogged ingots, blooms and slabs made by any except the crucible process, and fixing the duty at six-tenths of one per cent. per pound.

Aldrich offered an amendment which was agreed to, he said, by the members of the committee on finance, striking out this paragraph and substituting it by one providing for a duty of six-tenths of a cent per pound on the articles above enumerated, not exceeding in value 2 cents per pound, and 1 2-10 cents per pound on those above 2 cents and below 5 cents per pound, and in the value of the rates presented for crucible cast steel.

Brown moved to amend the amendment by substituting 5-10 for 6-10; agreed to.

Brown moved to further amend by substituting 1 cent for 2-10; agreed to.

Aldrich's amendment was then agreed to.

The next paragraph makes the duty on iron rails weighing more than 25 pounds to the yard 7-10c per pound.

Vance moved to make it 6-10c. He said a reduction of cost of railway rails would give the people cheaper transportation for their products, and he presented a calculation to show that the duties paid on iron and steel rails in the past 14 years amounted to $297,000,000; amendment was rejected. Ayes 22, nays 26.

Vance moved to amend the next paragraph so as to make the duty on steel railway bars and railway bars made partly of steel, weighing more than 25 pounds to the yard, 7-10c per pound, instead of 8-10c, as in the bill; agreed to. Ayes 25, nays 21. Adjourned.

House.

Kelley called up the tariff bill.

Carlisle made a point of order that the revenue bills must be considered in their order on the calendar. The point was sustained.

Objections were sustained to the consideration of a number of bills, including that to abolish the revenue tax on tobacco, cigars and cigarettes, and one to admit a monument to George Washington free of duty.

The committee then reached the tariff bill, and was addressed by Kelley, chairman of the committee on ways and means.

At the conclusion of Kelley's speech, which was brief, the committee arose, public business was postponed, and the house proceeded to eulogize the late Senator Hill.

BEECHER'S THEOLOGY.

He Preaches Evolution, Abolishes Hell, and Laughs at Original Sin.

Henry Ward Beecher lectured Saturday, Jan. 6, at Cooper Union, before an audience of 2500, on "Evolution and Revolution," in which he elaborated his speech at the Herbert Spencer dinner, and detailed at length his belief in a Christian evolution. He began with a statement of the doctrine of evolution as a description of the development of the divine method pursued in creation. The world, as we see it, was the product and growth of natural laws. This is held in a general way by scientists of the present day up to the point of the origin of man. Here there is a difference as to whether the human soul was the product of the progress described, or of special influences not brought to bear on inferior beings.

With regard to the relation of evolution to the existence of a divine creator, he thought evolution left the question where it stands. There are three kinds of evolutionists, atheistic, agnostic and theistic. The latter is a Christian. The existence of God can not be established by physical proof. But there is in all higher natures that which feels the existence of God. He would not say that man descended from the animal creation by uninterrupted natural laws, but if it be true, it throws light on many questions, and explains many difficulties not previously explained by any other hypothesis. How does this view affect the word of God? It will rescue that word from the abuse that has been made of it by believers in a plenary or verbal inspiration of the bible. The bible is a history of the development of man along a national and special line. It is itself an example of evolution. The word of God in its structure is confirmatory of evolution. If evolution is the divine method of creation it is to be seen in the household in the development of a child. People have thrown the bible at astronomy and geology, and yet both stand.

Again Mr. Beecher said: "You don't believe in hell. The men who preach it don't. They think they do; but they don't. Do you believe any man could believe in eternal punishment and live in peace? Could I look out on my fellow men and believe them doomed to punishment forever? Theology does not tell whether consequences follow in the other life."

He believed they did, but that is a different thing from the infernal doctrine of eternal punishment.

Mr. Beecher ridiculed the bible account of Adam and Eve in the garden of Eden, and denounced the theory of original sin and total depravity, and that swarms of human beings are damned because Adam ate of the apple. If this be the God he was called upon to worship he could not love or revere such a being. The whole theory of morals is to be advantaged by evolution. The essential truths of God all run down in their roots into natural laws. Every great precept stands, not on the authority of priests, but stands rooted in the authority of nature itself. Mr. Beecher said that evolution would compel men to change their theology, and that would be a good riddance. He closed by thanking God for christian evolution.

First Discovery of Gold in Eastern Oregon.

Grant County News.

On the 22d day of October, 1861, three California miners, viz: Messrs. Littlefield, Griffin and Scrivener, found themselves in what is now known as Griffin's gulch, a short distance south of Baker City. It was in the evening and they concluded to camp for the night. Observing the close similarity between the adjacent hills and the gold region of their state, they concluded to prospect for the precious metal. Accordingly Mr. Griffin took his pan and shovel, and after some little prospecting got a color. Darkness interfered with further prosecution of the work until morning, when all returned to the spot, and after digging to a depth of about four feet, reached dirt that panned fifty cents and upward to the pan. As a matter of course they were greatly excited. They took out more than a hundred dollars of dust and then started to Walla Walla to make a sale thereof and purchase supplies. On their way their horses and mules strayed, and they were compelled to walk a hundred miles over rugged mountains and through a country inhabited only by aborigines. Arriving at Walla Walla, they made many fruitless attempts to sell their dust, on account of doubts being entertained as to its genuineness. They were fortunate, however, in finding Mr. Isaac Kaufman, of the firm of Kauffman, Hace & Durkheimer, of Baker City, who purchased from them the first one hundred dollars ever taken from Eastern Oregon soil. Mr. K. soon after took the same to Portland, placed it on exhibition, and ventilated the news through the newspapers of the city. This was in the winter. In the following spring, that of 1862, miners and immigrants came flocking to the new Eldorado. In the town of Auburn, the then center of mining operations, over 300 houses were erected, and it was during this year that it reached its maximum of prosperity.

The gold in Griffin's gulch was as a drop in the bucket. Dozens of other mines were discovered and claims located in the vicinity. Excitement everywhere was intense, and by no means confined to one locality. Gold was soon discovered in the Canyon City, Granite creek, Malheur, Mormon basin and various other districts, and several large camps sprang into existence. The discovery of gold in the Boise basin, Idaho, soon after happened, and the tide then turned in that direction.

From the 22d day of October, 1861, dates the beginning of the growth of Eastern Oregon and Washington. At that time the population east of The Dalles consisted almost wholly of wild and untutored savages. Now we have cities, factories, mills, and industries of all kinds, and thousands of population. To these four men, Littlefield, Griffin, Scrivener and Kaufman, Eastern Oregon is primarily indebted for this change of condition, and their memory should long be kept green. Of course, had gold not been discovered, Eastern Oregon and Washington would, in time, have come to the front and assumed the place among the states which they inevitably must; but there cannot be the least glimmer of doubt in the mind of any man of ordinary intelligence and discernment that it has advanced their interest many decades. Gold always has been, and as long as it retains its exchangeable quality, will be the greatest stimulus to immigration, the greatest incentive to labor, and the chief element of a country's prosperity.

Six Young Ladies Close their Connection with the Portland High School.

EXERCISES AT NEW MARKET THEATRE.

Music and Essays by the Members of the Graduating Class—An Excellent Address by the Rev. Dr. Marvin.

The ninth commencement of the Public High school of Portland was held yesterday afternoon at New Market theater. The occasion of the graduating of a January class was an innovation upon former years and another noticeable fact was that all its members, six in number, were young ladies. Their names are as follows: Maggie Bell, Nettie Gray, Livene Grenier, Mattie L. Hering, Bertha B. McBride and Tina M. McMahon.

The body of the theater was well filled with people, though not so crowded as usual upon similar occasions, to listen to the commencement exercises. Certainly every one enjoyed the entertainment, although some physical discomfort was felt from the cold and damp, no arrangements having been made to heat the auditorium. The gallery was occupied by a crowd of small boys, which should hardly have been allowed, as by their running in and out and cutting other capers peculiar to them alone, many interruptions to the exercises were caused. The stage had been extended over the orchestra pit, giving ample room for a number of chairs to be placed in full view of the audience. In the center of the stage, in front, the graduates were seated, their teachers, from whom they were parting, upon their right, while just back of them, upon a slightly raised dais sat County Superintendent Paxton, City Superintendent Crawford, Profs. Henderson and Warren of the High school, Prof. Pratt of the Harrison school, Chairman Wilson, and Mr. Hodge of the board of directors, and the Rev. Frederic R. Marvin. Following is the programme of exercises rendered:

Music.
"Sovereignty" .... Elvene Grenier, (Salutatorian)
"Novelty" .... Nettie Gray
Music.
"Patronymics" .... Tina M. McMahon
"Brain and Muscle" .... Mattie L. Hering
Music.
"The Poet Preacher" .... Bertha B. McBride
"Labor and Wait" .... Maggie Bell, (Valedictorian)
Solo—"Magnetic Waltz" (Arditi) .... Mattie L. Hering
Address .... Rev. Frederic R. Marvin, D. D.
Music.
Presentation of Diplomas .... John Wilson, Esq.,
(Chairman Board of Directors.)
Class Song .... Orchestral Accompaniment.

The salutatory, by Miss Elvene Grenier, gave evidence of much thought. She spoke of the day of parting as one not wholly of unclouded sunshine, for it brought with it fears and misgivings for the future. True sovereignty she defined as purity of nature, and that might be found in any walk of life.

Miss Nettie Gray handled the subject she had chosen in an illustrative manner, showing how the desire of the human mind begets investigation, by investigation discovery, and discovery the advancement of mankind. The people of ancient times did not study novelty as found in nature as do the people of the 19th century.

Miss McMahon's essay on Patronymics was very interesting, giving a history of the strange origin which had come about between names and the events which gave them birth. Both ancient and modern history furnished many instances of such origin and here in our own section such names as Wallula and Walla Walla, needed only mention to bring to mind the race from whose language they were taken and who had now almost entirely disappeared from the face of the earth.

Miss Hering's essay upon "Brain and Muscle," was a well written discussion of the relations which exist between the two, and was well read. The cultivation of each by different races both of ancient and modern times was spoken of, and how churches and schools had been established by the one and armies by the other. The central idea was that both should be cultivated to the sustaining of each other.

The lessons taught by the poets, as outlined by Miss Bertha B. McBride, were shown to be always ennobling—higher and grander than the every day prose life around us. From the days of Homer to the present time, there is no condition of life the poet has not reached and the most perfect preaching is found in Longfellow's "Psalm of Life."

The valedictory, which fell to the lot of Miss Maggie Bell, was one of the most interesting features of the afternoon's exercises. The young lady had prepared herself to deliver the farewell address of the class to the school and their teachers without manuscript, which, coupled with the smooth and quiet manner of the wording made the whole an earnest talk with her companions and friends, bearing withal a touch of sadness in her tones.

The Rev. Dr. Frederic R. Marvin was then introduced and spoke as follows: Ladies and Gentlemen—I account it both a privilege and honor to address you upon the subject of public education, and especially upon an occasion so full of interest and fraught with such pleasing anticipations and noble resolves. Education is the one word that expresses the vast distance between the civilized man and his savage ancestor. In one form or another education signifies both the development of man's natural faculties and the acquisition of new powers and acquirements. Education is more than instruction, as wisdom is greater than knowledge. The mere accumulation of facts—the loading of the mind with dates and events, as you load a cart with stones—is nothing when compared with that systematic unfolding of the intellect itself, which we properly call education. Education has made civilization, and civilization has in turn rendered some degree of mental training absolutely essential to a useful and successful life. The struggle for existence which crimsoned rock and wave in the early ages before man appeared upon our planet, has now invaded human homes and occupations, and it becomes more and more difficult every day to acquire and maintain place and power. The demands of trade, commerce, art, science, political life, society and the church increase, and the men and women who fail to meet them must fall behind in the march of industry and content themselves with ever humbler and humbler places in the world's notice and reward. To successfully meet those demands, education is "the one thing needful"—education of mind heart and hand—a rounded and symmetrical development of man's entire nature in harmony with the latest disclosures of science, and according to the most approved methods of what we call, for want of a better name, "pedagogics." And if it be true that intelligence and successful industry are indispensable to the growth and welfare of a nation and enduring commonwealth, it must be evident that one of the first duties of the state is to secure to the children of all—rich and poor alike—the best advantages in an educational direction it is possible under the circumstances to provide. Church and school house are a nation's greatest safeguards and in the wide diffusion of intelligence is the best guarantee of national glory and achievement. I am a firm believer both in church and school. I believe in both, but never would I permit one to encroach upon the territory of the other. While friendly to parochial instruction, I am ever more heartily in favor of a liberal and unsectarian free school education for every boy and girl in America. Let churches maintain as many schools as they are able to support; let them equip them with the best cabinets, libraries and teachers, but let them remember that in America church and state are forever separated. I am a clergyman in full sympathy with the traditions and theology of my denomination, but I stand here this afternoon as an American citizen, and as such I demand for every youth, and maiden under our starry flag the best education the age can afford "without money and without price." And I demand that it shall be free from all ecclesiastical and sectarian influence and association and that not one cent of public money shall ever be diverted from its proper channel to support any system of instruction not directly and absolutely under the control of the state and of the state alone. Wadsworth wrote these words—

"O for the coming of that glorious time
When, prizing knowledge as her noblest wealth
And best protection, this imperial realm,
While she exacts allegiance, shall admit
An obligation on her part to teach
Them who are borne to serve her and obey;
[illegible] so that none,
However destitute, be left to droop
By timely culture unsustained; or run
Into wild disorder, or be forced
To drudge through a weary life without the help
Of intellectual implements and tools;
A savage horde among the civilized
A servile band among the lordly free."

That time has come in America. We have learned to regard the best education the world can afford as the natural privilege—the birthright, if you please, of every child born upon our soil. And what we have begun so successfully we will complete, making our public school system not only preparatory to, but in some respects the equivalent for a college curriculum. Nowhere in the country are better schools to be found than in your city of Portland. They are justly the pride of your entire state, and reflect the greatest credit upon the men and women who planned and established them. And yet, I must pass upon them this criticism, and I think you will concede that it is just. They do not fit a boy for admission to any regular college. You have no instruction in Greek language and literature. It may be, as has been intimated to me, that there is no demand for such instruction, and yet I think the [illegible] Greek would be taught to any one requiring it, [illegible]

I take peculiar pleasure in watching and [illegible] came from New England and from the heart of Puritanism [illegible] Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont [illegible] that the Puritans taught their women Hebrew and Greek, and encouraged them to take a lively interest in religious and political questions of the day. And it is not surprising that now the most prominent friends of the higher education of woman are descended from such men as Eliot, Carver, Alden and Bradford.

This brings me to the question of the liberal education of women. Is it wise to open our colleges and schools of science to women? Why not? Are they not capable of receiving a liberal education? The part woman has played in ancient and modern history, in the arts and sciences as well as in political life, constitutes not only an answer to the question, but a positive demand for admission to every department of knowledge and industry. Open all the doors and remove every barrier. Subject girls to the same requirements you exact of boys in male colleges, but in all justice and fairness set before them the same rewards. The best educators tell us that one of the finest mathematical students are girls. They read Virgil and Cicero, Xenophon and Homer as well in every way as young gentlemen. In public schools you will find as a general rule more girls than boys, and they are found on examination to carry off the greatest proportion of prizes. Wherever coeducation has been honestly and competently tried girls have shown themselves the intellectual peers of their brothers. They have more than held their own. There is nothing in the constitution of a woman's mind nor in the anatomy of her body to prevent her from following the same studies that occupy the time and attention of young men. [illegible] On the contrary, the drudgery of the classroom are often far less fatiguing than those of household labor. And for every maiden injured by over study I can point to hundreds ruined in health by domestic drudgery and that arch enemy of womankind—the sewing machine. I believe in coeducation. Boys and girls should be brought up together as far as possible. The influence they exert over each other is in itself a great civilizer. That woman has the most symmetrical, balanced, healthy and perfect temperament who with the sweetness of womanhood unites the strength of manhood, and that man has the most complete and rounded temperament who to the strength of manhood joins the fineness, gentleness and sweetness of womanhood. The separation of the sexes in church, state, family and school has always been productive of evil and only evil.

"The woman's cause is man's; they rise or sink Together, dwarfed or Godlike, bond or free."

In every school and college students should be made acquainted with themselves. They should be taught human physiology, the principles of hygiene and the laws of health. Hundreds of young men and women break down in their studies, or at least plant the seeds of disease which are to ripen later, through ignorance of those laws which in the end govern the development of mind and body. Years ago a common and foolish prejudice against teaching girls anatomy and physiology, deprived wives and mothers of the knowledge they most needed and helped to convert American women into a race of invalids. An ignorant woman who discovered that her daughter was being initiated into the mysteries of physiology at a district school, sent the teacher the following note: "Don't teach Mary Jane any more about her insides—its vulgar. Besides it don't do no good." Now I am glad that the Mary Janes are learning something about their insides. It will not hurt them to learn a great deal more.

At the close of his address, Dr. Marvin turned to the graduating class and said: Young ladies of the class of "83," you are about to receive from your alma mater the highest honor she can confer upon you, but I warn you against thinking that your education is completed. It will not be completed until death shall lead you into the presence of the great schoolmaster to receive from him the reward of a good and useful life. Nor will it end then, for eternity is but another school room where we learn new and grander lessons than can be acquired on earth. You are going out into a busy world to meet with opposition and to contend with trials and difficulties. Thus far your paths have been chosen for you, but henceforth you must choose for yourselves. Upon the choice you make will depend your usefulness here and your happiness in the world to come. All your attainments, your diplomas and honorable record of conscientious scholarship will avail you nothing unless over and above all you choose for yourselves a noble Christian womanhood. Make all that you have of personal culture and scholarly attainment tributary to moral development. "The arts receive the natural man and educate him step by step into the master art—the art of life." To live for the glory of God and the good of mankind should be the grand ambition of every human being. The Westminster divines were right; "Man's chief end is to glorify God and to enjoy him forever." But, I should add, it is also his chief end to serve his age and generation. Only the unselfish are truly happy. Remember the words of the poet—

"He liveth long who liveth well;
All else is life but flung away;
He liveth longest who can tell
Of true things truly done each day.

Then fill each hour with what will last,
Buy up the moments as they go;
The life above when this is past
Is the ripe fruit of life below.

Sow love and taste its fruitage pure;
Sow peace, and reap its harvest bright;
Sow sunbeams on the rock and moor
And find a harvest home of light."

After Dr. Marvin's address, which was listened to with great attention and met the approval of many persons present for the open stand he took upon the subject, Miss Hering favored the audience with a charming rendition of Arditi's famous song "Magnetic Waltz."

Then came the presentation of diplomas by Mr. Wilson, chairman of the board of directors after which the exercises closed with singing the class song, written for the occasion by Helen F. Spalding and which is here given:

Sad hour of parting,
But wait for our song,
Fain would we bid thee
Thine absence prolong.
Fain would we linger
To muse on the shore,
Ere we cut moorings
New seas to explore.
Sad hour of parting,
Fain would we linger,
Ere we set sail for an untried shore.

Time, unrelenting,
Is bearing us on;
Words must be spoken,
And deeds must be done.
Hallow the present,
'Tis all we can do,
So that when past
It shall hallow the new.
Out from our moorings,
Whate'er betide us,
Breezes from memory shall waft us anew.

Alumni Reception.

The reception tendered the graduating class of the high school by the alumni of that institution at Masonic hall last evening was one of the most pleasant affairs of the kind ever given. About sixty persons were present. A social dance to excellent music and an elegant supper enlivened with appropriate speeches, after which the dancing was renewed and kept up till midnight, were the principal features of the occasion. The graduating costumes of the class and many of the alumni in the rich dresses worn by them on a similar occasion gave the party a very dressy appearance.

Homeopathy and Insanity.

"Roaming Robert," of the Burlington Hawkeye thus writes: "The State Homeopathic Insane Asylum, is located at Middletown. That is a very sensible idea on the part of the state. If a man who is sent on going insane would only be content to become homeopathically insane, there would not be so many cranks wandering up and down this fair land. It's the big allopathic cases of insanity that do all the mischief. Now there are lots of men homeopathically insane, who are under no restraint at all. And it isn't really necessary. The man who will not cut his hair until Hancock is president, the man who believes Vennor's Almanac; the man who runs his farm by the moon; the man who takes votes on the cars; Oscar Wilde, and lots of other people, who only have it homeopathically, and are harmless. I do not know what is the peculiarly distinguishing feature of the homeopathic treatment of insanity, but I do know the building is very graceful and handsome, and the asylum under its present management enjoys a high reputation in the medical world for general excellence and good results. I presume, on the 'similia similibus' idea, when the crazy people are all housed in together, they cure each other.

Gov. Butler and Harvard College.

From the Boston Herald, Jan. 6.

A republican politician said yesterday: "You may as well tell the public that Gov. Butler will be invited to assist at Harvard's next commencement and that he will go over to the university in style, escorted by the red-coated lancers, with their nodding plumes and shining lances. President Eliot attended the inauguration ceremonies on Thursday in response to a personal invitation from Gen. Butler and the president of Harvard can do no more than reciprocate the courtesy by inviting the governor over on commencement day. You know that the connection between the commonwealth and the university has been dissolved, and the governor can nowadays only go over on commencement as an act of courtesy. It is a mere matter of tradition now." Another politician said: "President Eliot respects the office which Gen. Butler holds, and it would have been unseemly in him not to have accepted the General's invitation to attend the inauguration."

Butler and the Presidency.

Washington Correspondence Utica Herald.

General Butler has of late made no secret to his friends that he is looking toward a nomination either as a democratic or an independent candidate for the presidency next year. To one of these friends who was saying to him a short time since that it seemed strange that General Butler should care at his age and with his prominence to take upon himself the cares of the governorship of Massachusetts, the [illegible] replied: "You know very well what I want and am looking forward to, and you know that it is useless for any man to go before a national convention unless he can make it clear that he can command the vote of his state. The last [illegible] that direction."

WASHINGTON.

High Grade Steel Manufacturers Hostile to the Tariff as Amended.

Memorial Opposing the Consolidation of Western Roads.

PROBABILITIES OF AN EXTRA SESSION.

[SPECIAL DISPATCHES TO THE OREGONIAN.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The senate to-day gave the American steel industry a blow that may cause the defeat of the tariff bill in the senate and will probably have pronounced effect upon tariff legislation in the house. Considerable reduction was made in the bill of finance committee regardless of the fact that its measure proposed rates below those recommended by the tariff commission. The senate only passed upon first half dozen clauses of the [illegible] and it was not known what further amendments in the line of lower duties may be proposed and carried. The votes taken to-day prove that there can be no hopes of increase in the rates on any particular, with chances very largely in favor of decided reductions. Representatives of industries in the manufacture of higher grades of steel avow their determination to kill this bill. They say the action of the senate, to-day, if made law, would ruin their industries and compel them to close their mills, and they will oppose the passage of the senate bill as a matter of self-preservation.

The causes that led to the action of the senate are said to be of a somewhat personal character. Certain southern representatives, of whom Brown of Georgia may be called the leader, were incensed at the action of the finance committee in reducing the duty on iron ore and pig iron. They asserted that the metal schedule was drafted for the commission by the Bessemer men, and they took their revenge when an opportunity was offered to slaughter as they thought, the Bessemer manufacturers. In fact, the Bessemer men are known to have opposed the metal schedule until within the last month their support was won at a meeting in Philadelphia. They say they opposed the schedule because the proportionate reduction upon their industry was greater than that of any other in the schedule. If senators who voted to reduce the rates on steel to-day thought they were clubbing the Bessemer men they were mistaken; for the reduction will affect directly the open hearth and crucible steel men, and, in the judgment of one of their number, will ruin that industry in the United States. What effect the action of the senate will have upon the tariff bill in the house is problematical. It will either stiffen those who have been heretofore disposed to accept the ways and means bill to demand further reductions, or it will end in the failure to put through that measure, and lead the house, under the pressure of a popular demand for a revision of the tariff, to pass the tariff commission bill.

Facts and Figures to Prove the New Chinese Regulations a Fraud.

The treasury department has sent to the collectors of customs the regulations recently framed, in accordance with the opinion of the attorney general, to regulate the passage of Chinese laborers across the continent en route from foreign countries to China. Senator Miller says he has made special inquiries into this subject, and he does not think any apprehension need be felt that the law regulating Chinese immigration will be violated. Miller regards the granting of permission to Chinese laborers to enter the country only for the purpose of traveling homeward, as contrary to the letter of the law but thinks it may not be opposed to the state department's interpretation of the spirit of the treaty. In conversation with your correspondent, Miller said: "I don't think there are so many Chinese in Cuba to-day as is commonly reported. About 10,000 Chinese laborers originally went there, but a number of them who emigrated under old contracts have either returned to their homes or have come to the United States. The agitation for permission to allow these to enter the country was begun by railroad companies, which expected to make profitable transportation contracts. So far as I can learn no contracts for bringing these laborers through the United States have been made. I am informed that Chinese can be taken in sailing vessels around Cape Horn to China for $30 a piece. It would cost in the neighborhood of $100 a piece to bring them from Cuba to New York, send them to San Francisco and take them thence to Hongkong. Possibly this rate might be a little less via New Orleans or Galveston, but not enough to compete with the direct water route. Railroads were led to believe that they could get business by letters written to them by agents in Cuba, asking terms for transportation. If any attempt should be made to evade the law, detection will be certain. The treasury department has been informed that, if any considerable number of Chinese are landed here, an inspector will be sent to see that the law is not violated. Of course, upon the first detection, the question of the validity of the attorney general's opinion will be raised and cited in the courts."

San Diego Demands the Enforcement of the Terms of a Railroad Charter.

The mayor of San Diego and the president of the chamber of commerce, of that city, have sent to congress a memorial protesting against the passage of the bill for the consolidation of the Texas and Pacific and Southern Pacific roads. The charter to the Texas Pacific provides that it shall be built by the most direct eligible route to San Diego and to the ship channel in San Diego bay, following in its location, as near as practicable, the thirty-second parallel; also that the work of construction should be begun simultaneously at Marshall, Texas, and San Diego, and that at least fifty miles of railroad from each of said points should be completed within two years from date of the act, March, 1871, as in the supplemental act passed May, 1872, it was provided that the company should begin construction eastward from San Diego within one year thereafter, etc.

It is asserted that in consequence of this law San Diego and its citizens have made large donations of lands and incurred indebtedness for the Texas Pacific road, and other citizens purchased lands along the contemplated line from San Diego bay to Colorado river in expectation that congress would compel the completion of the road according to the charter. None of the proposed consolidated roads have been built within a hundred miles of San Diego, and petitioners representing the people of San Diego demand that congress should amend the bill for consolidation to compel the Texas Pacific to complete the road within eighteen months from San Diego eastward on the most direct and eligible route towards the Colorado river to connection with the Southern Pacific in California, under penalty of forfeiture of land grants in the United States.

Republican Caucus.

Notwithstanding the intimation from several senators, the republican conference this morning was so brief and informal, that nothing of interest transpired. The rumor is pretty well authenticated that the brief discussion of tariff matters was, in some respects, decidedly animated, and that enough was disclosed of the temper of the republican members, to indicate that it may be next to impossible to hold them to the caucus action. It is said Conger bluntly intimated that he would not vote for the bill upon its final passage if the present number of articles remained on the free list, and that Allison in reply, took occasion to point out the duty of individual senators, in terms which drew from Logan a vigorous defense of the rights of individual senators to sustain their convictions, untrammeled by party or caucus dictation.

Union Pacific Railroad Debt.

The commissioner of railroads is preparing a paper to enable the attorney general to bring suit against the Union Pacific railway company to recover a balance of about $1,000,000, alleged to be due on account of percentages on the net earnings, in the settlement of which the amount of this balance was ascertained. It was for new construction and new equipment, which were excluded, and for this reason the railroad company refuses payment of the sum claimed by the United States, and asserts that under the construction act of May, 1878, under the decision of the United States supreme court, these items should be deducted from the gross earnings as being necessary in operating the road and keeping the same in repairs. This suit raises again the question as to what constitutes net earnings under the law.

The President Non-Committal on the Extra Session Question.

The Washington Star says the president recently told a New England senator that while he was anxious to have congress pass the bill to revise the tariff he was fearful on account of the lateness of the session and the diversified interests in the bill that it would fail. Being asked if he would call an extra session of congress if the bill did not pass, he said, "That is an emergency I will not consider until it arises."

The Union Pacific Attacking its Own Stockholders.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The Evening Post says: If the recent litigations between the Union Pacific and the Credit Mobilier company are to be taken for what they are purported to be on the face of the law proceedings, they indicate an attack of the railroad company upon some of the most prominent and [illegible] holders of its stock, as represented by the Ames party and other Boston interests. It is probable that [illegible] has been the cause of the recent [illegible] Union Pacific [illegible]

THE STARS.

Proceedings of the Trial Interspersed with Hasty Words and Sharp Retorts.

[SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE OREGONIAN.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—J. B. Boone was called in the star route trial. He had a conversation with Miner, Stephen Dorsey, and perhaps with John Dorsey. In the conversation with Stephen he recommended Moore. Miner called at witness' office next day and saw Moore. Moore insisted on a salary of $250 a month, which Miner agreed to allow. After Moore left the city he called Miner's attention to the fact that a check had not been sent to his wife, according to promise. He also saw Stephen Dorsey, who promptly sent the check upon Moore's request. In connection with Stephen Dorsey, in November, 1877, Dorsey produced a letter from Peck, desiring him to secure an experienced man to get up bids for next letting. He offered witness the position, but the latter declined to accept a salary, demanding an interest in the business, which Dorsey finally agreed to give him.

Witness was asked who received the proposals when they were returned, but objection was made and another discussion followed. Bliss said Ingersoll was right in his statement that the government assumed that Stephen W. Dorsey was the root of the concern, in fact he sent out the proposals and received them. The court allowed the question, and witness said: The packages were returned to him through Stephen W. Dorsey. Three postmasters responded,—the postmasters at Little Rock, Hot Springs and Helena, and the proposals were used in bidding at the letting, all that could get in, said the witness.

In response to a question for identification of the letter, Bliss read as follows: "U. S. Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C., Dec. 9, 1878."

"Are you sure it is United States senate chamber?" said Ingersoll, with savage emphasis upon the quoted words. Then as the court rapped for order, "Oh, I only wanted that to be emphasized properly."

Merrick immediately presented another letter to witness, and inquired: "The Stephen W. Dorsey who signed that was United States senator, was he not?"

A.—"Yes, sir."

The letters were then offered in evidence as showing Dorsey's connection with the transactions to which the witness testified. "In other words," Merrick said.

Witness on the stand was temporarily placed aside while S. W. Dorsey himself spoke to the jury of what he had written with his own hand.

The defense objected and pointed to the record of the last trial, when the court rejected the proffered evidence. In the course of argument Ingersoll used the expression, "Where will this end?"

"In the penitentiary," promptly interrupted Bliss.

Ingersoll, shaking his finger at Bliss, said, "You will be there as soon as my client."

The court—This is entirely unprofessional.

Ingersoll—Did I provoke it?

The court—No.

Ingersoll—I represent a gentleman and do not purpose doing anything a gentleman may not do.

The court said—At the last trial it seemed to have gone off with the idea that it was an attempt to provide some sort of official misconduct on the part of Dorsey, aside from the routes in this case. In this instance it overlooked entirely the other question whether the evidence did not tend to show a connection between Dorsey and other defendants in the preparation of bids for a letting soon to be made. The court then got a certain view of the case and then ran off on that line. It might as well be understood the questions arising in this case would be decided without bias from any other decision. Suddenly, and with great indignation, he said to Williams, who was smiling, what do you mean by that sir? What do you mean by sneering and giggling like a fool at the decisions of this court?

Williams—"I don't understand you. I don't believe the court's language is warranted. I was talking about another matter and did not hear you."

The court—"You should have been listening."

Williams—"Your honor had not decided the question yet, and could not have expressed any opinion upon it."

The court—"The court accepts your disclaimer and owes you an apology for the severity of its language."

The delivery of the opinion was resumed and resulted in the admission of the papers. Dorsey's letters to postmasters in Arkansas, which have been already published, request them to have the blank proposals certified and returned to him, taking care to let no one know from whom they came. Root & Keevens, mail contractors, and friends, were to be especially avoided. To Hon. Geo. Haycock, at Pine Bluff, Ark., he writes: "This is for an intimate friend of mine and I ask that you do it as a personal favor." Defense objected to a question put to witness, asking the reason for omitting from the blank proposals certain provisions contained in the blank forms of bids issued by the department. The question was finally ruled out and the court adjourned.

SALEM NOTES.

SALEM, Jan. 26.

Jos. Niles of the San Francisco Call is in the city on a business trip.

N. Wheeldon, Esq., of this city, is thinking of moving to Portland.

Dr. Dawne has recently purchased a farm in Yamhill county near Wheatland.

J. Y. Byron, Esq., the well known book binder, is lying seriously ill at his residence in this city.

The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Crossman is lying dangerously ill with some type of fever.

Mrs. William Savage returned home last evening after a two months' visit with her daughters near Pendleton.

Mrs. Cline having purchased several lots in the old university campus will during the present year have them occupied with cottage residences for rental purposes.

The Stevedores, Longshoremen & Riggers Union No. 1 of Astoria has filed articles of incorporation in the office of the secretary of state with Alex Maleman, Patrick Hogg and John O'Rile as incorporators.

Wallace Baldwin, Esq., of Corvallis, has been appointed by the governor as commissioner to superintend the erection of a fishway or ladder at Oregon city as provided for by an act passed at the session of the last legislature, the sum of $5000 having been appropriated for that purpose. This is calculated to be of immense advantage to the fishing interests of our state, enabling salmon to surmount the falls and come up the Willamette river for propagation. The governor has been peculiarly fortunate in his selection of a commissioner.

No Right to be a Coward.

Reminiscences of Gen. Skobeleff.

Once a member of the corps diplomatique asked Skobeleff whether he never felt afraid. The reply is worthy of quotation: "You see, my dear sir," he said, "you have the right to be a coward; a private soldier may be a coward; a subordinate officer even can be excused for possessing the instinct of self-preservation. But from the commander of a company upward no justification for cowardice is possible. In my opinion a coward general is a contradiction in terms, and the less such contradictions are tolerated the better."

A congressman who does not scatter six or eight bushels of agricultural department seeds among his constituents must make the next campaign on his temperance record.—Detroit Free Press.

SATURDAY MORNING, JAN. 27, 1883

THE TARIFF CONTEST.

The struggle over the tariff [illegible] our high protective [illegible] longer [illegible] the tariff of the war period [illegible] tariff are inconsistent [illegible] many respects oppressive [illegible] even the beneficiaries of the system [illegible] ture openly to defend it. But the representatives are at Washington in great force bringing to bear upon congress and its committees all possible influence to secure retention of features which enable special interests to make great profits at the expense of the community and the country. One of the most interesting spectacles presented is that of the contention of these interests with each other for special advantages. Different branches of the iron and steel interest are making war upon each other in a way most edifying to those who have seen them hitherto leagued together in a common cause under an excessive tariff to maintain high prices. It is charged that the Bessemer steel men have been allowed too much influence in shaping the revision and that they have taken care of themselves to the detriment of other branches of the industry. Very probably the charge is well founded. Our tariff system for many years has been little else than a grab game in which every interest has taken all it could get. "Infant industries" nursed so long not only object to being even partially weaned but fight among themselves with prodigious vigor for precedence at the source of supply.

The great difficulty experienced by congress in dealing with this subject arises from the pressure of special interests from different parts of the country, all of which insist that they must have protection or go to ruin. Persons representing these industries in the various states go to their senators and representatives with an appeal for a tariff which will keep out foreign goods. Each congressional district in the manufacturing states has some special industry which the member is told he must guard against competition. Beset by the agents of so large a number of interests, all clamorous for a tariff which will assure to them great profits, members of congress can rarely act with a view to the whole interests of the country. In the effort of interested parties to secure artificial prices through the intervention of congress, the buyers and consumers of the country are forgotten. One member of congress insists on a high protective duty on silk manufacture, because there is a silk-weaving establishment in his district. Another wants a high duty on pottery, a third on glass, a fourth on steel, a fifth on spool cotton, and so on. Few members are courageous enough to withstand the pressure brought to bear by these special interests and to take a large and independent view of the whole subject and situation; for the big man knows very well that he never will get back to congress if he do not insist upon the highest possible scheme of protection for the manufacturing establishments of his district.

These are the conditions that make it so extremely difficult to secure any revision of the tariff in the line of reduction. Yet such revision there must be. The country is resolved upon it. There is no general call, indeed for abandonment of the principle of protection for this would give a sudden shock to the industrial and financial system of the country which would prove embarrassing, if not ruinous. What the country wants and will have is judicious revision, with partial reduction. The tariff commission pointed out a course that would be reasonably satisfactory, and if congress should refuse to act there would be an expression of displeasure which would be very likely to make itself heard in a forcible way when the next elections came round.

PROTECTION OF DEER.

The game law passed by the last legislature is now the subject of very bitter discussion between the sportsmen, or those who hunt for amusement, and those who make a business of hunting, or hunt to supply themselves with meat. It has been a custom for many persons of southern and eastern Oregon and indeed in nearly every part of the state, to employ the winter months in hunting deer for their hides; and to prevent this, which the sportsmen consider a great abuse, and which, in fact, promised soon to exterminate the deer in Oregon, the game law was enacted. It prohibits the killing of deer between the 1st of November and the 1st of July, and of female deer [illegible], and provides that the killing of either male or female deer at any time, unless the carcass of such animal is preserved or used for food or sold, is a misdemeanor and is punishable as such. Any person who buys, sells, or has in possession any of the deer enumerated, except such as are kept for curiosity or show, is declared to be guilty of a misdemeanor and liable to punishment. The professional hunters claim that the law is not necessary for the protection of deer, and that if it were, it is not just to stop a legitimate business in the interest of a few "fancy" sportsmen. Others, too, who do not kill deer for their hides, but who have been accustomed to supply their tables with fresh deer meat during the winter, regard the law as an unnecessary and severe prohibition. The sportsmen, on the other hand, contend that the strict enforcement of the law is absolutely necessary to prevent extermination of our finest game. An effort will be made by the people in the interior to have the law repealed at the next session of the legislature, and they will of course be bitterly opposed by the sportsmen. In the meantime the law is being pretty generally enforced, and destruction of deer in a great measure, stopped. The law is no doubt too strict, in that it does not allow the killing of deer at all times for domestic consumption; but undoubtedly some protective law is necessary. Last year thousands upon thousands of deer were killed in southern Oregon for their hides alone, one firm in this city receiving a single consignment of ten thousand skins. This wholesale slaughter is, of course, wrong, and it is to be hoped that the lawmakers cannot be induced to leave the deer wholly unprotected. At the same time it is a hardship upon the settler in new parts of the state to prohibit the killing of a deer for his table. It is probable there will be some modification of the law.

Perhaps it would be amusing if it would not quickly become monotonous to trace the tortuous course of articles from THE OREGONIAN through the journals of the northwest. For instance, an article on the mining industries of Eastern Oregon, copied without credit from our new year's issue by a paper of that section, came back to Portland to be used in the local columns of another paper here, and then continued its travels to Salem, where it did duty as a leading editorial, though credited to the Portland paper which had taken it from the Eastern Oregon paper which had conveyed it from THE OREGONIAN. Another elaborate article on the railroads of the northwest, taken by an Albany paper without credit from our columns, appears in a Boise City paper there credited to the Albany paper aforesaid. Almost every day in the week special dispatches to THE OREGONIAN from various parts of the country, reprinted by other papers as their own, reappear in journals of several localities, credited to the papers which had "borrowed" them from our columns. We are not complaining brethren; this journal finds sufficient reward in being the original source of useful articles and all the news.

The Boston Advertiser laconically sums up Governor Butler's message thus: Recommendations, 29; insinuations 18; misrepresentations, 5; reservations, 4; promises, 1.

NEW VESSELS FOR THE NAVY.

In the debate in the house of representatives on the naval appropriation bill [illegible] the plan presents these leading [illegible] cruiser of 5000 to 6000 tons displacement to cost $2,700,000 which ought to be [illegible] In addition [illegible] not less than 4000 tons displacement [illegible] power and not less than twin screws and power armed with [illegible] and with machine guns to cost $1,170,000; three steam cruising vessels of not less than 2500 tons displacement, each full steam and not less than two thirds sail power, armed with rifled cannon and with machine guns, to cost for all $3,173,675; one dispatch boat or clipper to be armed with French loading rifles and revolving machine guns to cost $600,000 [illegible]

Vessels like these would be [illegible] speed [illegible] that [illegible] citizens in all parts of the world [illegible] of other first class powers [illegible] in great [illegible] of jobbery in the construction of [illegible] a fear that cannot be [illegible] groundless when the fact is recalled that since the close of our great war we have expended more than $250,000,000 on our navy and yet have no vessels worthy of the name.

The New York Tribune furnishes some figures which show to what an enormous extent gambling in grain and other articles of commerce is carried on in that city. During the last year the sales of wheat exceeded 1,000,000,000 bushels while only 40,000,000 bushels were actually received. The sales of corn amounted to 450,000,000 bushels or nearly thirty times the quantity received. In the way of oats 150,000,000 bushels were sold against 16,000,000 bushels received. Gambling was also carried on in provisions, petroleum and cotton. Of the latter over 30,000,000 bales, equal to the entire crops of six years, were sold, while less than 500,000 bales were actually delivered. It is in this manner that the business world is becoming demoralized, and legitimate business made to suffer damage.

By the report of the state comptroller of New York it appears that the valuation of the taxable property of the state is $2,789,681,567. Of the assessed property about $2,300,000,000 is real estate and the remainder, say $500,000,000 is personal property. The assessment of real estate is supposed to represent about one-half its actual value, and the assessment of personal property about one-tenth of its actual value, so that the whole wealth of the state would amount, in round numbers, to $10,000,000,000, which is supposed to be something like one-seventh of that of the whole country. About one-half the wealth of the empire state is in the great metropolis.

No skill, no care, no industry, no equipment can be sure of baffling the terrible moods of the ocean, as recent disasters prove. The minimum of danger lies in the minimum of exposure. The thing to be attained is speed. If the time of the ocean trip between Portland and San Francisco could be reduced one-half, also would the dangers of the trip be reduced. Some time ago it was proposed by the Corbin steamship company to put a line of steamers on the American-European route which would cross the Atlantic in five days. Such a line would become at once immensely popular.

New York has 1,400,000 inhabitants and Philadelphia 900,000. The fire loss of New York during 1882 was $4,200,593, and that of Philadelphia was $2,169,190. Comparison of the wealth of the two cities in connection with their fire loss might be a fairer test than comparison of population. In that case it would not seem out of the way to find the fire loss of New York twice that of Philadelphia.

The new governor of Michigan, Mr. Begole, opens his inaugural message with a suggestion that the term "governor" is a "harsh and inappropriate" designation for the office which he occupies. He says his position is that of a "principal servant," and his feeling is that a servant of the people ought not to be called their "governor." We fear Mr. Begole will have to pass as a pretty small demagogue.

CITY.

DESTITUTE AND NEEDY.—Mrs. S. Heinck, a poor woman who lives upon First street, near Montgomery, is in very destitute circumstances and her case is one that calls at once for the sympathy of all kind people, and the charity that may be bestowed upon the needy and the deserving. For nearly two years past this noble little woman has, by the work of her needle, supported herself and an invalid husband, who has been bedridden all this time, nursing him night and day and supplying, so far as she was able, every luxury that her loving heart could devise to relieve his suffering. Her incessant care has broken down her once vigorous frame, and her husband is lying at the point of death. Unless something is done to relieve their present needs both must soon perish miserably of want. Such devotion as hers should excite the better feelings in the heart of every one. Oscar W. Dunbar, a neighbor, has interested himself in behalf of the needy family, and will to-day call upon our citizens for contributions that may serve to relieve immediate wants. He should be received with encouragement and aided by all, so far as possible, in his good work.

FIRE.—About dark last night fire broke out in the two story frame hotel, known as the Brooklyn house, on the northeast corner of Fourth and E streets. A strong west wind was blowing and soon the whole house was ablaze. Trenkman & Wolf's machine shop adjoining on the east were in great danger for several minutes, but very prompt and efficient service saved it. The dwelling of John Dooley, adjoining on the south, narrowly escaped destruction. Fifteen minutes' good work extinguished the fire. A portion of the furniture on the lower story of the hotel was removed, but contents of the upper floor were entirely destroyed. The hotel was owned by Pat. G. Gleason, who has $1300 insurance in the Western. This will nearly cover his loss. The building is owned by Mrs. Andrew [illegible] and is damaged to the extent of about $2000; insured in the State Investment. John Dooley suffers slight loss by water and removal of furniture; insured in the State Investment. The fire probably originated from a defective flue.

[illegible] FARGO SUIT.—In the United States [illegible] court yesterday morning, Hon. J. F. McNaught, of Seattle, closed the argument on behalf of the railroad companies in a very strong speech. Great eagerness was manifested to hear Hon. Clar[illegible] Howard, and the court room was crowded. Among the crowd were the principal lawyers of this city, of the interior and of Puget sound; and for its numbers probably as intelligent and critical an audience was never before gathered here. Mr. [illegible]'s argument was confined principally to adducing reasons why a preliminary injunction should be granted, and he only hinted at points which will arise when the merits of the case shall be discussed. The speech is regarded by his professional brethren as an exhaustive, keenly analytical argument. After its close, court adjourned till [illegible]

[illegible] COMMUNICATION.—Our reporter was misinformed as to the exact location of the new town site of New Albina, just now put on the market. It is in lots 2 and 3, section 15, T 1 N, R 1 E, just north of Lewis Love's donation land claim, one and [illegible] miles east from the Willamette river at [illegible] wood yard, and about the same distance [illegible] of Albina. It is on a high, dry and level [illegible] of ground, overlooking Portland and the [illegible] far to the north of it, is just the place for [illegible] suburban residences, and is offered on terms within the reach of all. No better location on the [illegible] side of the river. The property is in the hands [illegible] in this city and East Portland. "Let 'er [illegible] when the tide falls is the time to get your [illegible]

[illegible] BURNED.—About one o'clock yesterday [illegible] Pillar Rock cannery, fifteen miles east of [illegible] on the Washington territory side, burned. [illegible] owned by Everding & Farrell and John Eler[illegible], of the Columbia [illegible] now in [illegible] and on a visit. Each owned a [illegible] interest. The loss to building, boats, nets, [illegible] is $25,000; insured for $10,000 in the [illegible] companies: Guardian, $5000; Lancashire [illegible] California, same $5000. The origin of the fire is [illegible]. If boats can be secured in San Francisco [illegible] for the fishing season, the cannery will be [illegible] rebuilt.

[illegible] SCOTT GRAMMAR SCHOOL.—The regular [illegible] examinations were held at the Bishop [illegible] Grammar school this week. The following [illegible] received the highest marks and stand in the [illegible] named: Geo. Breck, Ernest Shaw, Maurice [illegible], Albert Abraham, Ray Cooke, Jas. Russell, [illegible] Buck, John Carson, Winter Kelly and [illegible] Ross. The following boys were perfect in [illegible] for the quarter: Geo. Breck, John Carson, [illegible] Hoyt, Harry Scott, Winter Kelly, William [illegible], Luther Glass and James Russell.

[illegible] RUMOR.—Reports were generally circulated yesterday that thirteen men had been lynched on the Northern Pacific front, and that a charge of giant powder in [illegible] had brought to the surface twenty [illegible] bodies giving evidence of having been murdered. This report was started by an employe of the company, just down from the [illegible]. No such news has reached the company's office here, and THE OREGONIAN'S correspondent at the front has sent nothing of the kind; hence the story may be set down as groundless.

PAINFUL ACCIDENT.—Elmer Huntington, a member of engine company No. 1, received a very painful injury at the fire last evening. The hose had got outside of one of the iron guides at the rear of the cart and Huntington lifted it back to its place. As he did this the cart started up suddenly, jerking the end of the hose around and the heavy brass coupling [illegible] the mouth, knocking out several of his teeth and bruising his face badly.

RUNAWAY.—Last evening as the fire was in progress Charles Zeigler, while on the way from the [illegible], stopped his team at [illegible] O. R. & N. Co. building, corner Front and D [illegible] and went in to buy a ticket. The unusual [illegible] and excitement alarmed the horses and they [illegible] around the corner, demolishing the street [illegible]. They were caught by a person passing, who [illegible] in the operation.

[illegible] GALE.—The gale of hurricane on Wednesday [illegible] the heaviest experienced there this season [illegible] from Capt. Hancock at 10 o'clock [illegible] morning states that the government sloop [illegible] during the night and capsized [illegible] on Peacock spit and the life [illegible] went out and towed her into the bay. [illegible] a large water tank at Booth's cannery [illegible] bodily upon the roof.

[illegible]—The Orchestral Union concert at [illegible] last evening was, like those which have [illegible], highly entertaining. The audience [illegible] and lost had its appreciation by applause [illegible] and hearty. Mrs. E. M. Hersey, nee Miss [illegible], appeared for the first time since [illegible] in Portland, and was enthusiastically [illegible]. Her songs charmed the audience and [illegible]

[illegible]—Bishop Morris desires, on [illegible] the Good Samaritan hospital, to acknowledge receipt of $277 from the funds of the retiring [illegible] Engine Company No. 2. The sum [illegible] to the credit of the firemen's fund, [illegible] the benefit of any sick or wounded [illegible] may need medical treatment or nursing.

[illegible] MATCH.—The skating match at [illegible] evening for a medal will be enlivened [illegible] the East Portland band and Prof. [illegible] will give an exhibition of bicycle riding. [illegible] who can to contest against [illegible] are against the best skaters of [illegible] skating match is expected.

[illegible]—Henry Smith, an expressman, [illegible] down to Ainsworth [illegible] with a number of boys in his [illegible] and whipped his horse [illegible]. Policeman [illegible] that the [illegible] the city ordinances, [illegible] Smith. Ten dollars.

[illegible] ARREST.—William Grape, Joseph Loebe [illegible] have been held to answer before [illegible] grand jury at Astoria for robbing Captain [illegible] of Westport of a gold watch and some $40 [illegible]. Their bail was fixed at $300 each, in default [illegible] they were remanded to jail.

[illegible] MEETING.—There will be the [illegible] exercises at the Y. M. C. A. hall to-[illegible] L. N. Donaldson will sing, and [illegible] will preside at the piano. The [illegible] will be by Chaplain R. S. Stubbs. The public [illegible] invited.

[illegible] BIBLE MEETING.—The annual meeting of [illegible] Bible society will be held at the Presbyterian church, in this city, Friday evening, March 2. [illegible] have been secured for the occasion. [illegible] invited to attend the meeting.

[illegible] LIST.—The following letters remain in [illegible] Fargo & Co.'s express office unclaimed for the [illegible] Friday: G. C. Burwell, James McPhail, [illegible] A. Gilbert, C. S. Windell, D. M. Watkins, [illegible] E. T. Wilson.

[illegible]—The line to Astoria was down yes[illegible], and it is not known whether the Queen of the Pacific crossed in or not. She had not arrived [illegible] o'clock this morning.

Chas. Risley, of Oregon City, is thinking of running a small steamboat daily between Oregon City and Portland.

Rev. A. W. Bower of East Portland goes to Salem to-day to occupy the pulpit of the Congregational church in that city Sunday.

The steamer Latona will be drawn from her present route in a few weeks, having been purchased by Muckle Bros., of St. Helens, for their own use.

Julius Harris, an insane man from Walla Walla en route for the asylum at Steilacoom, in charge of Deputy Sheriff J. A. Fadden, was lodged in the city jail last night.

The fire commissioners are now ready to issue exempt certificates. Blank applications can be obtained from the secretary, Wm. L. Eppinger, room 24, Union block.

There is a telegram at the police office from Weeksville, Montana, inquiring whether a brother of Ed. Enright, who was shot and killed there on the 21st inst., is in this city.

Martha Washington Circle No. 1, Daughters of Liberty, will hold its regular monthly social and dance to-night. Like all previous ones, it will no doubt be an enjoyable affair.

The Mary Hogarth, from Montevideo, is lying at the foot of Pine street, and will discharge as soon as she gets necessary entrance papers. Delay is not caused by want of hoisting power, as stated by a contemporary.

E. B. Sprague, charged with obtaining $125 from Hugh Fitzgerald, had an examination in Davis' court, which resulted in his being bound over to await the action of the grand jury under $500 bonds. Sprague claims that he was acting on the authority of a house he represented, but a dispatch appeared to contradict it.

Liberty meetings will be held at Nonpareil Hall to-morrow. At 2 Judge Lawson has agreed to produce supernatural phenomena, in the presence of the audience, to sustain his side of the subject. At 7 S. H. Greene, Esq., will deliver a lecture on "Our Little World and its Neighbors." A cordial invitation is extended to the public.

F. F. Lichstadt, who is charged with larceny of a $10 gold piece from his room mate at the New York hotel, was placed under $100 bonds in the police court yesterday. Eichstadt said that rather than go to jail and await the action of the grand jury he would plead guilty to a charge of petit larceny, but Attorney Mulkey objected to the proposition.

The hearing on the habeas corpus in the case of William Lawrence came up in the circuit court yesterday. Counsel for the state and for the defense appeared to have some misunderstanding in regard to the disappearance of a witness and carried the matter a little too far. Judge Stott put a stop to the discussion by remanding the prisoner till the attorneys had time to cool off.

RETIRED FROM BUSINESS.

To-night the firm of Mellis Bros. & Co., whose name has become a household word throughout the northwest coast, retire from the retail dry goods business to enter exclusively the wholesale trade. In a few years they rose from a small beginning to the recognized position of the heaviest retail dealers in Portland. Their invariable motto was to keep faith with the public and when they had anything in stock that the people needed, they always let the fact be known through the press. They built up a lucrative trade not only in the places which are in daily rail and steamboat communication with Portland, but in the remotest parts of Oregon, Washington and Idaho, and in Western Montana. For sagacity, enterprise and industry they set an example which will leave its impress upon the trade of Portland.

NOTABLE EVENT.

Grand Opening of Capt. Schneider's Establishment in East Portland.

This evening Capt. Schneider, the jolly, good-natured host of the Albany Brewery Depot in this city, will open a fine new establishment on the corner of Fourth and E streets, East Portland. He has fitted it up in elegant style and stocked it with the very best of wines, liquors and cigars, together with a full supply of the famous San Francisco Albany beer. The wines and liquors he has in stock are of the choicest quality of best known brands and for household and family use are unequaled. Upon the occasion of the grand opening this evening a superb lunch will be spread, to which all are invited. We can assure all that they will be generously entertained, as we know that Capt. Schneider never does anything by halves. If you want a jolly good time, then call at the corner of Fourth and E and you will not be disappointed.

SECURITY IN PORTLAND HOTELS.

Having read so many accounts of hotel fires in the papers lately, we are very naturally a little timid about what hotel we patronize. Having expressed our fears at the St. Charles hotel before retiring, we were kindly shown through the house and found the most perfect arrangement for the escape of guests in case of fire. The house is thoroughly built, has good brick partition walls, and has three different avenues of escape, viz: Front, Morrison and First streets, the one on First street being so situated that it would clear the two upper floors in a few minutes. We also noticed that the house was supplied with funnel running up, and that there was a good current of air going through the spacious halls, which, in case of fire, would keep the house clear from the dense clouds of smoke which often prove so disastrous by creating confusion to suddenly awakened people. The night clerk also makes the rounds of the entire house every hour during the night to see that the lamps, fires, etc., are in order, and any smell of fire or smoke would be discovered in reasonable time to prevent any loss of life. AN OLD HOTEL MAN.

Great inconvenience was caused at the opening of the fall term, by reason of a delayed shipment of books to J. K. Gill & Co. Special pains were taken to avoid a repetition of this accident at the opening of the present term, and every book required through all the grades may be had this morning at new reduced prices, at Gill's book-store, 23 First street.

Mr. George P. Lent has leased the corner store in the new brick block, corner Second and Salmon streets, for a drug store, which will be opened on or before the first of March, with a fine stock of drugs. The business will be in charge of Mr. J. E. Lent, a druggist of many years' experience in Ohio and California.

Fred. Gebhardt has ordered some of those fine candies from S. L. Stone's for the Jersey Lily. She can't get along without Stone's sweets. Corner Ash and First.

THE EAST SIDE.

A BEREAVED WIDOW.

Mrs. Kate Smith, the jail missionary, who resides in Tibbett's addition, has had affliction brought to her household of late to such an extent as to render herself more an object of pity and charity than those for whom she has labored. Within a few months she has lost by fever two sons, who were her main support, and now her eldest daughter is lying nigh unto death with the same disease. This unbroken chain of trouble and adversity has caused not only her health to give way, but an exhaustion of her means. Mr. Atterbury, a neighbor, succeeded in collecting sufficient for present needs, but further assistance is necessary for her proper care and support during her affliction, and the attention of the charitably disposed is called to her case as one worthy and deserving.

RETURNED.

Mr. T. C. Smith, of the firm of Smith & Sharp, who was summoned to New Tacoma a few days since to place a steam pump in the American ship Carleton, having fulfilled his mission returned night before last. The people, he says, speak very disparagingly of Portland, and very confidently of their future greatness. According to his report, the chief features of the place appear to be an abundance of hopes and an abundance of sand. With these characteristics, they certainly deserve to attain the greatness for which they yearn. Mr. Smith, however was glad to leave them in their prospective glory and return to take his chances in Web[illegible]

NewspaperARCHIVE®

The Daily Oregonian.

SATURDAY MORNING, JAN. 27, 1883.

A SONNET.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF GEORGE ELIOT, WHO DIED IN DECEMBER, 1880.

In the stern month that strips the forest's bough,
Turning the leafy world to shadowland,
Our thoughts are borne to one whose gentle hand
Waved its farewell in such gray time as now,
Whose path through Death's dim twilight valley lay.
Did lights from the Great City meet her eyes?
Heard she Heaven's voices' sweetest melodies?
We only know—"George Eliot died that day."

She left earth's gifts, but ah! she took our hearts,
Do we not love thee? Queen of Fiction's page,
Mother of noble souls; clear-visioned sage,
Friend of true lovers whom misfortune parts,
No wintry winds can hasten to their fall
Thy leaves, which lie upon our hearts' south wall.
—Temple Bar.

"POVERTY."

In days of old she lived a worshiped saint,
Her humble, lowly mein by all adored.
Men loved the maid for following their Lord,
And though their love, perchance, was cold and aint,
Not like the passions of more human birth,
It was a pure and sacred flame, they said.
And she was one whom good men vowed to wed
And thus abjure the luring snares of earth.
Alas! as time went on such love grew rare,
And with men's favor went her honored name,
'Till sneers and cold contempt became her share,
And she was fain to hide her head with shame.
At length, when left by all, Crime sought her hand,
And now his sons and hers infest the land.
—The Academy.

VANDERBILT DESCRIBES HIS HORSES.

The Future of Maud S.—The Double Team Time of Aldine and Early Rose.

From an interview in the Spirit of the Times.

"I was driving Maude S. with Lysander, in August, when it occurred to me I would get her ready and show a fast mile, beating, if possible, 2:10¼. In that view I sent for Bair to come on, and told him to take her in hand, expecting to get her in condition and drive Lysander or some good horse to trot with her. I knew Clingstone was a good pole horse, and I had seen his owner, and we had a perfect understanding about them. With this understanding Bair went to work at her. A few days later I bought Early Rose, and sent her at once to Hartford. She had never been hooked double. She was hitched and a soon that she was going to be a wonder. I took a party of friends to Hartford, where we saw Early Rose and Lysander go, and then drove her. while the inside of the track was wet with the sprinkler, on the outside, a mile in 2:33¾. Aldine had trotted the day before, and trotted again the next day. Mr. Shepherd bought her during her last race, and the following day Mr. Rockfeller bought her for me after a heat with Early Rose, which conclusively showed to those present that they were going together as a team. They trotted on this occasion in 2:25, the last half mile in 1:11, and the last quarter in 31 seconds.

"I then sent word to Bair to drive them together, and the next Friday I would bring a party of gentlemen from New York to see that team trot a fast mile, and also to see Maud S trot a fast mile single and double with one of the mares. Before this, Bair put Maud S with Aldine, and they went in 2:20. He was afraid, he afterward told me, to let her go any faster, as she had not lost much flesh since leaving Saratoga. He drove Early Rose and Aldine in 2:25, and repeated in 2:21 the following Monday, the track not having been touched since the racing the week before, which was the only fast work they had. This was on Wednesday, when unexpectedly I got, at Newport, on that day a letter from Bair, saying he would show me as fast a half mile as Maud S ever went, but that she had lost so little flesh he was afraid to drive her a mile and that she could go.

"On receipt of this letter I made up my mind that I would take no gentlemen to Hartford to show them a half mile. I telegraphed them all that the engagement for Friday was off, and sent a message to Bair to drive the horses as fast as he would the next day, Wednesday, September 13, and give them to New York with Maud S, and Lysander to Thursday, and notified Mr. Towsey to send a car for them on Wednesday. He drove them, not in 2:16¾, or any other time, but merely to see what they could do, and he telegraphed to me that evening at Newport that they trotted in 2:16¾. Mr. Jackson tells me he knows the gentleman well who held the watch, which indicated 2:16 2:5, and that he is entirely competent and trustworthy to time anybody's horse.

"There are seven horses, counting Maud S, in my stable at the present time. Any two of them can trot in 2:20, and are perfect single and double horses. They are all the fast ones I own, and if any other man can show such a pair I would like to see them. I claim, and I think I will show, that some of them will be put together and trot in 2:15—Aldine, Early Rose and Maud S. Time will tell.' There will be Nameldy, and not as a scratch.

"Maud S is now in charge of Bair, subject to Captain Stone's careful management, and where she will appear next season will depend on circumstances. My present idea is to let her trot during the regular summer meeting at Chicago, and later make a hold day with her and some of my other horses at Hartford, showing both double and single performances, free to the public. If no ill luck befalls Maud, I think the turf annals of 1883 will be marked with a white stone. In my judgment, she is sound as she ever was in her life, and I think will beat her record. There, as to her road work, I never had any trouble with her. I always knew she was a mare that would not brook unkindness, but if handled gently you can do almost anything with her—inside, if she is to hold. Of course she is like all high bred, good feeling horses; she needs regular exercise. Last spring, shortly after she came home I drove her and Lysander just as fast as he could go without breaking, and she went as steady as wind making her best time. I drove her occasionally in the fall with that mare (pointing to Early Rose), and she acted very well, trotted fast and steady."

MOSLEM FORMS AND CEREMONIES.

The Gentleman's Magazine.

The life of a good Moslem seems all interwoven with forms and ceremonies, and the law of the Koran of some such sacred words seem forever on his lips, mixing most freely with all secular matters. No action, however trivial, may be commenced without commending it to Allah. A Mohammedan will not even light a lamp without having the name of the prophet. Even the cries of the street hawkers bring in frequent allusions to ministerial merit, as when the poor water carrier offers a cup of cool, refreshing drink to all passers, crying aloud, "Oh! may G—d reward me!" Whatever be the matter in hand, one of the company will certainly utter some such reminder as Bismillah, and his friends will reply "Bismillah," meaning, In the name of God! In truth, the phrase of which we hear so much seems little less than a living faith; a power of living calmly as in the presence of God—just as the strongest practical characteristic of a good Hindu's faith seems to be a calm full reliance in the will of the Almighty, under whatever name he may revere him. So faith in the Moslem seems well nigh to fatalism, and our own English expression of "It was bound to be" seems tolerably akin to the "Kismet" of the east. I remember an old housemaid being sorely perturbed at having knocked over and smashed a valuable china vase, but a few minutes later she recovered her equanimity and exclaimed, "Weel, weel! it had been lang i' the family, and it was boun' to be broke"—so saying this flattering unction to her soul, she went calmly on with her dusting. Lane, speaking of this continual allusion to the providence of God, mentions that no Moslem will speak of any future event or action without adding, "If it be the will of God." He explains "the cries of the night watchmen, whose deep-toned voices resound through the dark hours. One man cries, "O Lord! O Everlasting!" Another says, "I extol the perfection of the living King who sleepeth not, nor dieth." He tells, too, of a mode of entertaining a party of guests in Cairo by the recital of a khatmeh, which means all of the Koran chanted by men hired for the occasion. Fancy imagine inviting a party in London to hear the whole bible chanted as a pastime, with an accompaniment of pipes and coffee. Mr. Lane also speaks of the reverence with which the holy book is treated—always placed on some high, clean place, where no other book or anything else may be laid above it. He attributes the Mohammedan's dislike to printing their sacred books to the dread lest impurity should attach to the ink, the paper, or, above all, lest the ink should be applied to the holy name with a brush made of hog's bristles. Worse than all, he book becoming thus common, is in double danger of being touched by infidels. This dread of dishonoring sacred names extends even to the 99 titles of the prophet and the names of them near of kin to him. Thus one man will refuse to stamp his name upon his pipe bowls because it bears one of the names of the prophet, which will thus be made to pass through the fire. Another man, less scrupulous, is blamed because he has branded his name, which is also a sacred name, on certain camels and horses. The sin thus committed is threefold: First, the iron brand is put in the fire, which is horrible sacrilege; secondly, it is applied to the neck of the camel causing blood to flow and polluting the sacred name; thirdly, the camel is certain some day, in lying down, to rest his neck on something unclean. This dread of casting holy things into the fire does not, however seem to apply to such as can be consumed. A Mohammedan, finding a fragment of paper covered with writing, will burn it, so that all holy words should be thereon inscribed, the flames may bear them up and the angels carry them to heaven.

New Schools in France.

From the Pall Mall Gazette.

Mr. Mundella has several times lately called attention to the "lavish expenditure" of France upon education, and to the necessity of "bestirring ourselves" if we do not wish to be left altogether behind. The last vote of the chamber before Christmas gives fresh emphasis to Mr. Mundella's remarks. Each commune is to be compelled to establish a school, not only in the chief village, but in every hamlet two miles distant therefrom where there are 20 children of school age. It is estimated that this bill will create 40,000 new schools at a cost of £28,000,000, of which £16,000,000 will fall on the state. The reactionaries protested against such "lavish expenditure," especially in the face of the threatened suspension of great public works, but M. Ferry answered that "to stop railway-making was one thing, but to arrest a movement which impelled the rural democracy toward light and knowledge would be high treason; it was well to have railways, but still better to make men and citizens." The representatives of our own working classes seem to be coming to much the same opinion, and Mr. Burt told the Northumberland miners on Christmas day that the one thing still needful was education, by which he meant "not only ability to read, write and cipher," but the higher education of which M. Ferry spoke. Meanwhile any rate payers who grumble at what they call the "lavish expenditure" of the London school board would do well to remember that in the coming year Paris, with its population of under 2,000,000, will spend on education double the amount expended for the 4,000,000 people who live in London.

Ruskin's New Employment.

New York Evening Post.

Mr. Ruskin (who though not yet officially gazetted as the new Slade professor of fine art, is generally accepted as such by those who should know) has announced his intention to deliver six lectures on art at Oxford during the ensuing term, thereby implying his acceptance of the chair. The title for the series is not yet fixed upon, but those who know Mr. Ruskin say that it is not likely to be definitely chosen until the first lecture is delivered. Mr. Ruskin is hard to please in this particular. It is said that he changed and rechanged the name of a lecture, given some time ago in London, at least a dozen times, and only made up his mind a few hours before its delivery.

The new Presbyterian church has been turned over to the building committee and will soon be occupied.

NEWS OF THE NORTHWEST.

Western Oregon.

St. Helens wants a new butcher shop.

Something near 200 tons of ice were put up in Oregon City during the late cold spell.

The Oregon Mist is the name of St. Helens' new paper. Its first issue is dated Friday, January 26.

All available teams in St. Helens are engaged in hauling brush to the new jetty to be constructed there. About 10,000 cords of fir brush will be needed for the work, and this will all be cut between St. Helens and Deer island.

But little damage was done by Thursday morning's gale, the nearest approach to injury being at the new roadway opposite Trullinger's mill, where the heavy tide sent some logs in against the piles, and necessitated repairs.—Astorian.

The wind storm of Thursday at Astoria took a water tank at Booth's cannery, which was standing on a platform about fifteen feet high, and carried it up on the roof. These tanks are built of three-inch plank and will hold about 3000 gallons.

There were 86 marriage licenses issued by the county clerk of Yamhill county in 1882. Of these the greatest number, 15, was issued in October and the smallest, 2, in August. June came next to August with a record of 4 and November followed it closely with 13.

Arrangements are being made for holding a county Sunday School Convention at McMinnville at a near date—about the second Tuesday in March, and to continue over several days. All Sunday schools in Yamhill county will be invited to take part in the convention.

Philomath, Benton county, was incorporated by act of the last legislature. It has two dry goods stores, one drug store, two blacksmith shops, two wagon shops, a barber shop, etc. Philomath college is in a prosperous condition, with nearly one hundred students in attendance. There is no better institution in the country. The college had the misfortune to break its large and costly bell a few days ago while tolling on the death of a stranger from Alsea named Wilcox. Everybody is anxious for the completion of the Oregon Pacific railroad.

Washington Territory.

The Seattle gas works burn South Prairie coal.

Two flouring mills are in operation at Elma, Chehalis county.

A new weekly paper will be issued from Montesano in a few days.

The saw mill at Cosmopolis, Chehalis county, is sawing cedar for the Portland market.

The Puyallup stave factory is running again, and will not close down again until fall.

Chehalis county has seven postoffices, all receiving mail twice a week. Its assessed valuation for 1882 was $376,022. Its population is estimated at 2000.

Work on the railroad bridge over the Puyallup river, is proceeding slowly, and it will be some time before it is done. The grade up the Stuck river valley is being changed for about a mile.

Fay & Alden have a contract for 7,000,000 brick to be delivered to Steilacoom parties as soon as possible. They have begun work on a building 22x30 feet, with a kitchen 12x32 feet, for the accommodation of their hands at the brick yard.

Henry Rupp, a little child of about 4 years, was killed in Steilacoom on Saturday last. He had climbed over the wheel at the old brewery, and stepping on the wheel caused it to move around, crushing the child as he fell between it and the wall.

Some Simcoe Indians make fair teamsters. Five of them arrived in town this week, each driving four horse teams loaded with hardware for Imbrie & Hinman. Their loads consisted of stoves, granite iron, fanning mills, coal oil, etc., and they delivered the goods in good order.—Yakima Signal.

The Tacoma railroad shops continue to manufacture on an average, one car per day, and as fast as manufactured they are sent to the divisions east of the mountains, where they find immediate use. An unusually fine express car is now being finished at the shops. The usual large forces are employed and all the departments are pushing their work with customary vigor.

The sealing season is again about beginning. The various schooners are all busily preparing to go out, and will all be off the cape during the first week in February. Last year the schooners bid and worked against themselves, and the Indians bagged the profits, getting unheard of prices for skins. This year a combination of vessel owners will prevent a repetition of such foolishness, and the owners will get the share that legitimately belongs to them. A dozen vessels will engage in the fishery.

The Hoquiam mills on Gray's harbor are cutting from 50,000 to 66 000 feet of lumber per day. The mill company have laid out a town site and have already surveyed a number of lots. A logging camp, thirty miles up from Hoquiam, furnishes a large share of the logs for the mills. The harbor furnishes as good an entrance as can be found anywhere between San Francisco and Puget Sound, a late report of a prominent engineer showing 18 feet of water on the bar, which along the channel has a width of only 1600 feet.

The working force of the Carbonado coal mines is now about 300, and accessions are being constantly made. Of this force 200 are white men, and 100 Chinese. The latter are employed to keep the fans running, sort coal, etc. On Saturday the largest train of coal cars that ever went into Carbonado was in response to a telegram. The train was drawn by two engines, and consisted of 118 cars. On Monday 70 cars more were sent to the mines and on Tuesday an order was received for 60 or 70 more. At that time there were over 2000 tons of coal in the bunkers at Carbonado. The output of the mine is now between 300 and 400 tons per day, and in all probability this will soon be greatly increased as superior facilities are now afforded for shipping, since the completion of the railroad bunkers in this city and the acquisition in the way of colliers. The mines are in good shape, well timbered and quite comfortable to work in so that there is nothing to prevent a large production. With the present good condition of the mine, it is estimated that not over 350 miners need be employed to get out 1000 tons daily.

Anthony Trollope's Literary Habits.

From the London Standard.

But Mr. Trollope's industry was not limited by the work which he did as a novelist. It is now just two decades since he left the postoffice, in which he had served for more than a quarter of a century. He was a painstaking official, and was employed on some important missions for surveying land and establishing postal conventions with other countries. At this time he frequently worked as much as 14 hours in a day, and he practiced the same habits of close and protracted attention until quite recently. He had the faculty of mapping out for himself a task, and of letting nothing interpose to prevent or delay its completion. Every day brought its appointed labor, and every day it was performed. Anthony Trollope worked by rule, as he even ate and slept by rule. He was always an early riser, and when he lived in Essex would frequently be in his study at 4 o'clock A. M., write until 10, and then go out hunting. His usual habit, when in London, was to wake at 5 o'clock, to read for an hour, or a little more, in bed, and then to set to work. Four hours' writing brought him to breakfast time. When that meal was over he would correct his proofs, or read, till his horse came to the door. He also regulated his ride that he seldom failed to enter an appearance at the Athenæum between 5 and 6. Fond of society, and exceedingly hospitable, he had, still, not a little of the student about him. He read much Latin, and wrote a little manual on Julius Cæsar, in Messrs. Blackwood's series, "Ancient Classics for English Readers." The work of which he was most proud, and which he thought one time would be his last, "The Life of Cicero," appeared some three years since, and was meant, to a certain extent, to answer Mr. Froude's strictures upon the orator in his biography of the great Roman general.

More lately he had visited South Africa. During the past summer he had been in Ireland, and was busy on a book recording his impressions of a country which he knew and liked well at the time of his death. It would have been impossible for him to go anywhere, or to see anything, without transmitting his views to paper. His usual plan was to begin to write about the country which he visited immediately on his arrival; at the time he sighted the cliffs of England, on his return journey, the manuscript of the new volumes was well-nigh finished. Mr. Trollope was nearly as much a master of the art of writing anywhere, and under circumstances of whatever personal inconvenience, as the special correspondent. In addition to novels and books of travel, he wrote short stories, essays and articles of all kinds. He was a constant contributor to the now defunct St. Paul's Magazine, of which he was the original editor, and in which he published the first attempt at authorship of Mr. Archibald Forbes—"Christmas in a Cavalry Regiment." He wrote sketches of clergymen and hunting men in the Pall Mall Gazette, and in the monthly miscellany just named a series of excellent papers of English sports and pastimes. No man of our time has at once worked so conscientiously and so hard, and has derived more satisfaction from existence. His tastes were simple; but he insisted that the simple things which he liked should be the best of their kind. He was a stanch friend and a generous foe—often wrong-headed and obstinate, but always animated by chivalrous and manly influences. He did countless acts of kindness, of which from his own lips the world knew nothing, and he will be mourned by a wide circle of genuine friends.

Mrs. Samuelson, an Austin lady, did not know that Mrs. Flapjack was a widow, so when the latter spoke of her late husband, the former remarked: "My old man came home late once, when we were first married, but he never risked it a second time. A Romantic Story.

About twenty years ago Mr. John Herholtzer and Miss Mary Kinninger were married at Wapakoneta, Ohio. They lived together for two years when Herholtzer suddenly and mysteriously disappeared, and was never heard of until December 27, when he presented himself to his wife in Wapakoneta again. He had so changed in appearance that she did not recognize him for a while. He has not yet given his reason for abandoning her, but seems again anxious to reclaim her as the wife of his bosom. During all this lapse of years, Mrs. Herholtzer has never made application for divorce, always believing and trusting that her absent husband would return to her. She is now a middle-aged woman, of an excellent reputation, and is overjoyed that her faith has been rewarded. Herholtzer himself is a man of good habits and respectability, but seems to have been totally indifferent in regard to his marriage vows. For some time past he has been living in Michigan, and has made considerable money since he left Wapakoneta in 1862.

FINANCE AND COMMERCE.

FRIDAY, Jan 26.

The wheat market is steady and presents no new features. Quotations are the same as reported yesterday. Sellers and buyers show no signs of withdrawing from their present stand, and as long as vessels are held as at present and the English market is unchanged but little elevation may be expected in prices of wheat.

The sale of 1500 tons mentioned yesterday is now ascertained to be a fact, and a 3800-ton lot has been sold at the same figure.

The produce market shows no change. Eggs are rather dull.

The Astorian of this morning says: "Considerable activity was manifested yesterday in salmon sales. Some 25,000 cases were sold at 2½ on the river, of this number William T. Coleman & Co. represent 25,000. The reason given is that large consignments to England lately arrived and now due, have materially weakened the market."

No Use for Them.

Concerning Certain Relics of the Past—Dogs that have had Their Day.

George Stephenson's "Rocket" and the magnificent locomotives of to-day are built up on the same general principle, yet the machine with which the great engineer astonished his age is interesting now only as an illustration of the beginning of the invention. There were plasters with holes in them long before BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER surpassed both the oldie and the [illegible] and the triumph of the Capcine is founded upon the partial successes or the utter failures of its predecessors. Everything of value in the old plasters is retained in the Capcine, but at this point all comparison ends and contrast begins. For example:

The old plasters were slow in their action; the Capcine is quick and sure.

The old plasters lacked the power to do more than to impart slight temporary relief in cases easy of treatment; the Capcine penetrates the system and permanently cures the troubles for which it is recommended.

The old plasters depended for good results they might attain upon an accident of their makers and the [illegible] faith of their wearers; the Benson's reaches its ends by means of the scientific combination of the rare medicinal ingredients which it contains.

In brief, the old plasters, like Stephenson's discarded engine, are switched off the track, while the Benson's go on its way winning golden opinions from all sorts of people.

Yet in this very fact lies the lurking danger to the people who buy and use this reliable and scientific remedy. "Hypocrisy is the tribute vice pays to virtue." Imitation is the concession failure makes to success. Benson's Plasters are parodied in name and style.

Beware of swindles. The genuine have the word CAPCINE cut in the center. Price 25 cents. Seabury & Johnson, Chemists, New York.
